Good Afternoon,

Here's a brief update on the Horizon coal mine out here in Utah. The contractor completed work at the site last week. I did a final walk through with the contractor this Tuesday and everything looks great. I'm really happy with how reclamation turned out.

We ended up doing a couple change orders to seal all entries into the mine with reinforced concrete for added public safety. I also had the contractor excavate additional volume to establish evenly sloped gradients along the reclaimed channels. This will hopefully allow the channels to be more stable over time. The contractor seeded the site, but we're going to seed a few more areas before winter sets in. The final bill for the contractor was just under $400,000. This leaves us with $50,000 to abandon wells, plant additional vegetation and use for overall upkeep at the site over the next couple years.

I've shared a folder with photos of the site I took on Tuesday. If you're familiar with the site I bet you'll be surprised by how different it looks. Let me know if you have any questions/comments.

Thanks,
