On July 16, 1997 I talked to Tim Thompson of JBR Consulting about the June 30, 1997 submittal. I told Tim that the Division was drafting a letter to the Permittee stating that the June 30, 1997 submittal was determined administratively incomplete. Tim agreed that the submittal was deficient and said that additional information would be submitted to the Division on July 21, 1997. He asked if the Division could hold off on sending the letter until after the Division had reviewed the new information.

The Division suggested that the Permittee withdraw the amendment and then resubmit. Tim said that procedure would require the signature of Patrick Collins, the resident agent, who was out of town. Waiting for Patrick Collins to return would delay the project. Coval wants to begin construction of the facilities as soon as possible and worries that waiting for Patrick's return could delay construction by a week.

The Division proposed an alternative to the rejecting June 10, 1997 submittal. The Division would freeze the review until July 21, 1997 when the new information is scheduled to be received. Tim agreed to the proposal and promised to fax the Division a letter outlining the agreement.
